

Burning tropical shrubland vegetation, called 'cerrado', near Brasilia, Brazil, June 25, 2002. This open grassland-woodland vegetation is common in south-central Brazil. Adapted to poor soils, it burns almost every dry season. Trees are fire resistant and resprout after the fire has passed through. (Photograph by Viviana Horna.)

